Reproductive Health: The Somali Child Spacing Program and the Karen Family Planning Program

The Somali Child Spacing Program and the Karen Family Planning Program provide culturally appropriate reproductive health education and resources to both the Somali and Karen communities, and to health care providers serving them. Grounded in a health benefits, client-centered approach, Somali and Karen CHWs assist Somali and Karen men and women to understand their reproductive health options, and how to access resources and care. Staff also work with providers to increase their cultural sensitivity, which improves their work with Somali and Karen patients.

Over 300 Somali men and women received reproductive health information and services through individual conversations and small group education sessions

Nearly 40 Karen men and women participated in Karen-language community classes

Over 600 health care professionals, educators, and other social service professionals were engaged in conferences, trainings and health fairs that WellShare staff participated in

Uganda Child Spacing Program:

WellShare continued its long-term work in reproductive health and continued two USAID-funded projects in 2015. Through Advancing Partners & Communities (APC), and the Arua District Partnership for HIV/AIDS and Family Planning Integration Project, we worked to scale up access to contraceptives including intramuscular injectables in Uganda.

The project reached 3,522 clients through project-trained staff and village health team members, as well as more than 19,041 people with family planning messages during group discussions and home visits.

Thank you to WellShare's funders and major donors for supporting the advancement of sustainable community health around the world!
